The Lincolnton Police were assisted Tuesday in policing the city and handling the traffic by 20 men of Troop "E", who proved themselves veterans at handling traffic. Not a single accident occurred during the day due to the vigilance of these men, and they are to be congratulated and commended for their excellent service on the big day.

Next event prized red on the calendar is Thanksgiving Day which falls on Thursday, November 27th, October and November have been months of celebrating with auto races, the fair, Armistice Day. For the next 60 days business will likely have the right of way. People are interested in buying and selling, squaring up before the New Year. Business boosting is the thing just now.

Major R. G. Cherry, of Gastonia, who made an address here on Armistice Day, left his overcoat in the speakers stand when he left hurriedly for the business. When he asked Sheriff Abernethy if he had seen it, the sheriff thought it was the natural thing to forget on a pretty day like last Tuesday, especially when an ex-soldier had his mind on the main chance—barbecued pig. The last we heard of Major Cherry he was calling on all of the other county officers in quest of his overcoat. The genial major may need it this winter.

The burning of waste and trash in the yard back of the News office Wednesday at noon brought the city fire department promptly. Fire from the trash pile crawled along leaves and dry grass to the kindling wood near the rear end of the brick building; the wood caught on fire, charred the window sills, and threatened serious damage. Quick action prevented serious damage thanks to the firemen. There was no damage to the equipment inside the News office, other than from water, and that was very small.

The original fool to the parade Tuesday put out by the Hunting Club flashed a hunting scene. A personal stunt was loaded with fruit and a half dozen opossums crawling about in the trash, and hound dogs treeing them, and with hunters like Lester Abernethy and J. M. Smith under the auto calling for the folks who hunt that possums are ripe.

Laugh, scream and be merry. A laugh for every minute—Sixty screams an hour when Wallace the great Magician meets you Friday night at the New High School auditorium at 8:00.

Robert Miller, 20, of Chesterfield County, was seriously injured yesterday morning when a tractor he was operating plunged down a thirty-foot embankment. Miller was thrown from the tractor and fell beneath it, one of the wheels passing over his body.

Rushed to Memorial Hospital in a taxi, physicians performed an operation on the young man in an effort to save his life. The man arrived here at 1:50 p. m.

Last night it was announced from the hospital that the condition of the patient was serious. He is suffering from a punctured kidney and other internal injuries.

A graduate of the Chester High School last year, Miller had taken up farming and lived near the scene of the accident. He was engaged in road work for the county at the time the accident happened. ### OLD NEWSPAPER REVEALS SOME HISTORY ABOUT THE BATTLE OF KINGS MOUNTAIN

Shelby—The gun-powder that was the battle of Kings Mountain, which was the turning point in the American fight for freedom, was never paid for and was the gift to her country's cause of a heroic mountain woman—such is the trend of an aged old historic story unearthed in this county some time ago.

Mary Patton before marriage Mary McKeown—born and reared in England contributed to a great extent to the death of Colonel Ferguson, the defeat of the "red coats"—her countrymen—and to the independence of her adopted people, and yet until last week her name was unknown to the people who live within sight of the famous battleground, a shrine in the hearts of American lovers of freedom.

The revelation of the true story of Mary Patton could not have come at a better time for recently Kings Mountain celebrated the 144th anniversary of the famous battle. Some of the most prominent Americans from all sections of the country attended that day and paid a tribute to Colonel Shelby, Sevier, Campbell, and the rugged North and South Carolina mountaineers and their deadly squirrel rifles that brought about the downfall of Ferguson and his men. But now Mary Patton will come in for the glory she should have had decades, or rather a century ago. The name of the only glory that she ever received for the victorious fight 144 years ago was the thought that without the powder she made the battle could never have been won.

Old Newspaper Carried Story

Out on Shelby R-1, lives a Mrs. S. E. Goforth, a direct descendant of Mary Patton. By chance Mrs. Goforth noticed posters telling of the big celebration in the offing. To her mind the posters recalled an old newspaper in her store of valuables, and brought to light the paper—The Carthage Courier, published in Carthage, Elizabethtown, Tenn.—told a historic story, one never heard before in this section regarding the famous battle. The story was told through the medium of T. Y. Patton, a great grandson:

"Mary McKechen, born and reared in young womanhood in England, came to America and landed at Carlisle, Pa. There she met young John Patton, who came to America from Ireland and they were married and lived for a time at Carlisle. While a girl in England Mary Patton learned the trade of powder making. It being an old English law that boys and girls there had to learn a trade.

"Nathaniel Taylor, a brigadier general in the revolutionary army, married Polly Patton, a first cousin of John Patton, Mary's husband and Taylor entered a boundary of land near the mouth of Buffalo creek in Carter county, Tenn. Through his wife General Taylor learned that Mary Patton knew the art of powder making and John and Mary were persuaded to go to Tennessee. Taylor built the house, or mill, in which Mary worked, on a branch known nowadays as Powder branch. There Mary Patton made powder for many months and years after the war she helped win, was ended.

Furnished 200 Pounds of Powder

According to the tradition related in the old newspaper story Mary furnished Shelby, Sevier and Campbell with 200 pounds of powder without any charge, although her price for powder was said to have been one dollar per pound. Following the gift of powder from Mary Patton the ragged Carolinians gathered at Sycamore shoals and marched to Kings Mountain where they drove the "red coats" for the mountain where Ferguson declared, "all h—— could not move him."

The powder she made was carried across the Blue Ridge mountains before there was a road save a trail or by path, the old story relates, and the trials and hardships connected with the making of the 200 pounds of powder that had much to do with the America of today will never be known.

Mary Patton lived to be 85 years of age, dying on the farm now owned by James Moffett at the head of Powder branch on December 11, 1836. Her husband was buried in a graveyard near Oak Grove church in the same county.

The story was handed down by generations, the reliable history of the mountain people. Mary Patton reared a grandson, S. E. Patton, who for years helped her make powder in the powder mill on Powder branch, and the story was first told by him to his son T. Y. Patton, who related it in the Tennessee newspaper.

N. Y. PAPER ADVERTISES N. C. TO THE WORLD

(New York Times.)

The story of the new North Carolina as told by French Strother in The World's Work draws the imagination like a magnet, so fascinating are his pictures of the progress of its people at the last quarter of a century. Many a man looked at a map of North Carolina, with Pamlico Sound and the Atlantic Ocean on the east and the towering Appalachian range in the west, so that it is blessed with every climate of the temperate zone, has envied its inhabitants their natural advantages. What a state to be born in and to work and play in, where the summer heats can always be escaped by hieing to the mountain forests, where the winters are mild and short, and where the soil yields of its abundance and the sea and its lagoons of their teeming fish and game! But to North Carolina's natural wealth the energy and industry of its people have added incalculable resources, with the result that cities have sprung up from backwoods settlements, straggling villages have become handsome towns, modern highways have been constructed from sea to mountains, and where were poverty and privation not many years ago are now plenty and luxury. In brief, North Carolina has risen from the ruins of the Civil war to an almost incredible prosperity. Her people owe much to the inspired leadership of Charles B. Aycock, who served them as governor and died full of honors 12 years ago. He had been "a plow boy on a red-clay farm, his family of no consequence." His first passion when he grew to manhood was schools. He "dropped dead in the middle of a sentence in a famous speech on 'universal education.'"

Mr. Strother speaks of Aycock as "perhaps the greatest orator North Carolina has produced, as well as one of its sweetest spirits and bravest men." No man's epigrams were more stimulating. He declared that "a democracy cannot be built on the backs of ignorant men." Others who helped North Carolina to see "her dreams come true" were Edwin A. Alderman and Walter Hines Page. The latter's inspirational speech on "The Forgotten Man" can be read and is treasured by thousands of North Carolinians. Well known also is his book "The Building of Old Commonwealths." Such cultivators of natural resources as the Dukes contributed powerfully to the progress of the state. The road builders brought the people of the highlands and the plains into such intimate touch that no farmer now lives far from a metal highway. There are no more isolated mountaineers. The poor white as a type has vanished.

The farther North Carolina goes on the road of progress the faster she seems to move. Seven years ago she spent $1,000,000 a year on school maintenance. Last year the amount was $23,000,000. In 1900 the value of her school buildings was $1,000,000. Today it is $48,000,000. In 1900 the state spent $76,000 on roads. In three years she has spent $76,000,000 on concrete and macadam roads to convert the seats of her 100 counties. Her wealth has been multiplied by ten in twenty years. In 1900 her bank deposits were $10,000,000. She has practically no immigration. Her fortunes have been piled up by the brains and sinews of a native race that is not afraid to work. So she has become one of the richest per capital states in the Union. Her death rate is the lowest in the country.

VARINA MAN SETS UP NEW HOT DOG RECORD

C. H. Rowland, popular manager of a cafe in Varina, N. C. is author of the following story and vouches for its truthfulness: Mr. Rowland has a large following of truck farmers and growers around Varina, and his "Hot Dogs" and sausage sandwiches are very popular with his customers. One customer in particular seems to like Mr. Rowland's service, for he dropped into his place one day last week and stated that he wanted to buy every hot goose he would eat a thirty days. According to the story he began eating "Hot Dogs" and before he stopped had devoured thirty seven. He called the transaction a purchasing five bags of peanuts and stated that by eating them during the afternoon he might make out until supper. I think the above fest gives the champion championship of North Carolina as hot dog eater.

HOW IT WORKS

(From The Huston Post-Dispatch.)

The superintendent of the Chicago schools has ruled that the practice of truancy is unlawful, and that a girl does not absolve her from obligation to the compulsory school attendance law. Therefore, unless the husband of a Chicago girl, who quit school and married, sends her back to school, he must go to jail. We suppose, in case the child labor amendment to the Federal Constitution is adopted, the husband of a wife who happens to be under 18 years of age will be compelled by law to hire a cook, as it will be unlawful for the young wife to work. Ain't paternalistic Government great?

THE TROUBLE AND THE REMEDY

Discussing the recent controversy in regard to High School football between Hickory and Statesville, the Landmark of the latter city says:

The ever-growth of athletics, or rather the athletic spirit, in our educational institutions, has become in recent years a matter for serious concern. The trouble is to confine athletic activities within the bounds of reason. Our institutions of higher learning have been and are wrestling with the problem, which has developed to such an extent in our high schools within recent years that many of these are now facing a serious difficulty. Abolishing athletics entirely because of the excesses is neither practicable nor desirable. The difficulty will have to be faced and met, and it would seem that men who are capable of bossing a school should be capable of controlling the athletic feature as well as any other part of the institution. Without reference to the regrettable and unfortunate incidents which have brought on a dispute between Statesville and Hickory foot-ball teams and their friends, the Greensboro News is moved to the following observations, which are worthy of consideration generally in connection with all parts and contests:

"A sudden development of interest in a high school team has been accompanied too often by a craze for winning on the part of many persons not directly connected with the school but nevertheless able to bring pressure on school officials. These townspeople have demanded a winning team at any price, even if the price include not defensible. The difficulty will have to be faced and met, and it would seem that men who are capable of bossing a school should be capable of controlling the athletic feature as well as any other part of the institution. Without reference to the regrettable and unfortunate incidents which have brought on a dispute between Statesville and Hickory foot-ball teams and their friends, the Greensboro News is moved to the following observations, which are worthy of consideration generally in connection with all parts and contests:

"A sudden development of interest in a high school team has been accompanied too often by a craze for winning on the part of many persons not directly connected with the school but nevertheless able to bring pressure on school officials. These townspeople have demanded a winning team at any price, even if the price include not defensible. They have sometimes influenced the school men to do their and so. They have surrounded the sport with an unwholesome atmosphere.

In the final analysis the fault lies with the school officials. They are the ones who control or if they do not they ought to. They have the authority, and it is their clear and unavoidable, duty, to see that the sport in their schools is conducted in the right manner. It is not always easy to stand up against a powerful local influence that seeks to dominate the school athletics, but for that very reason the teachers ought to have the more backbone to stand on their own feet and let the world know who is in charge. Control can never be anywhere but in the schools themselves. And a school man, teacher, principal or superintendent, who has not the courage to be the boss of his own school is a matter that involves fundamental questions of truth and honesty and honorable conduct and fair play, all of them intimat'ey connected with the pupils entrusted to him, is not fit to hold his job 10 minutes longer. High school athletics has far too much of positive good in it to be endangered and the schools might as well start right now to see that this good is cherished and developed.

SENATORIAL VOTE CANVASSED

Now the savory perfume of the reserving little, the soft gurgle of the boiling canner, and the dapple whiteness of the drying screen should be foretelling of good things to eat this winter.
